She's a Grammy-winning artist, but Billie Eilish wants to treat herself to some Halloween chocolates like everyone else. In fact, this artist even brought a lollipop to an awards show. What's Billie Eilish's favorite candy? Here's what we know about the artist behind songs like Bad Guy and All The Good Girls Go to Hell. Billie Eilish brought a lollipop to the Grammy Awards. Some may know Billie Eilish for her music videos or for her award-winning song Bad Guy. Others know her as an Office fan and a person who isn't afraid to be herself. She wears unique clothes and even brought a lollipop to the Grammy Awards. This wouldn't be the first time Billie Eilish has brought her sweet delight to an awards show. In November 2019, her co-host at the American Music Awards was a lollipop, even posing with Dua Lipa with him. However, for a video the artist shared what her favorite chocolates are. Billie Eilish accepts international female solo artist award | Jim Dyson/Redferns Billie Eilish loves some chocolate candies In addition to her lollipop moment at the awards show, Billie Eilish shared her love for a few different chocolates. For a video near Halloween, a number of artists commented on their favorite candy for snacks. Kevin Jonas of the Jonas Brothers called Butterfinger and Twix. Billie Eilish chose some of her favorite Halloween treats to share. Reese's peanut butter cups and Twix's Kit Kat. I'm vegan so it's over for them, Billie Eilish said during an exclusive RADIO.COM video interview. However, as much as Billie Eilish loves her candy, she often talks more about her dietary choices, arguing about the environment in the process. Because Billie Eilish is vegan, she chooses to exclude a range of foods from her diet. This includes milk, ice cream and other dairy products. RELATED: When's Billie Eilish's birthday? Here's how this Grammy-Nominated Artist celebrates this December Billie Eilish is vegan, which means she doesn't eat meat This artist is vegan, which means she doesn't eat meat or dairy products. Face-to-face meetings are the most natural way to communicate. But if that's annoying, then video conferencing has a lot to do with phone calls. People pay more attention when they can see people talking. Unfortunately, for all the benefits, video conferencing is incredibly easy to do. Everyone thinks they know what they're doing but they've never been trained to do it, says Paul J. Bailo, author of the essential digital interview manual. Here are some tips to look like a pro:1. Get the right lights. Elevated lighting is the worst kind of lighting for video conferences because it makes shadows under your eyes. Unfortunately, this is what most people have by default. You may not be interested in lighting if you do a quick snow-day check-in with the team you've been working with for four years. But for high stakes situations (such as job interviews) when you need to look your best, Bailo recommends using three natural, soft light sources: two behind your web cam (one on the left, one on the right) and one just behind you.2. Watch your corner. Are you using a webcam cut to the top of your screen? Chances are it's not your capture from the ideal perspective. If you're angled down too, you'll put your fellow meet-goers in the position of towering over you. You want the lens to be right at eye level. A tripod can take you there and keep the camera stable. If you use the built-in camera on your laptop, it can be very low and looking at your nose. Although not ideal, you can put hardcover books under your laptop until the corner is right. You want the camera to capture the triangle of your forehead on your left shoulder and your right shoulder in the frame.3. Look good. Even if only your face and shoulders are in the frame, you never know if you should get up for some reason. So they look decent from head to toe. Put some flattering, solid colors near your face, just like TV news anchors do. Check your teeth for meal residue. Make sure the temperature is such that you won't sweat, and you won't have to start layering, which is worrying for everyone watching. Less Make sure you have the right chair, says Bailo. Fidgeting is fine for sound, but deadly when you can see someone moving like an overactive school boy in the corner of your screen. The people you interact with will be treated with the view of what's behind you throughout the meeting. Garbage and clutter is bad enough. Your bed with dirty clothes on it is unprofessional. Or worse, you may have something sitting on this is part of the landscape to you, but jarring to everyone else (e.g. that Dallas Cowboys Cheerleaders poster your child moved out of his bedroom but never put away). Bailo recommends investing in what is called seamless paper (what professional photographers use in their studios) if they should do a lot of digital interaction. If you don't want it in a live meeting you shouldn't have it on a conference call. If you're in an office, Jay O'Connor, chief marketing officer of Blue Jeans, a videoconferencing service, suggests painting a spot on the wall with company colors and a copy of the company logo to serve as the backdrop. You look like a million dollars, he says. You look like this incredibly established company. It's a very low-cost way to make yourself come across as a professional big business. 5. Minimize distractions. Bailo suggests making an On Air sign on your office door when you're alive in order to keep other people from walking in. If you work at home and people worry about those who are too young to read and obey such a sign, then you should rent a babysitter or ship them off elsewhere. Pets, too. A barking dog can ruin a conversation, as can a cat running over your keyboard. First impressions count when it comes to video conferencing, says O'Connor. If you don't want it in a live meeting you shouldn't have it on a conference call. 6. Be prepared. The video is closer to a face-to-face meeting than it is to a conference call, but most people treat it like a conference call. So they try to see their notes, or they're squinting at their computer screens. That's like holding a piece of paper in front of your face in a live meeting. You'll come across as not listening, says O'Connor. Know your highlights and search so you can interact normally and score the benefits of seeing people and seeing. The American musician and multiple Grammy Award nominee Billie Eilish recorded the theme song for No Time to Die, the upcoming 25th installment of the James Bond film franchise, and now the official music video for the song has premiered. Titled No Time To Die (apparently), the black and white video shows the song Eilish against the backdrop of scenes from the film. The 18-year-old singer and songwriter is the youngest musician to perform a James Bond theme in the franchise's history, with Eilish co-writing the theme with her brother and frequent music partner Finneas. In January, the announcement of her involvement with the film was teased for several days before it was confirmed by Eilish itself on social media, as well as the official social media account for the James Bond franchise. The #NoTimeToDie title song will be performed by @billieeilish. Billie has written the song with her brother @finneas and is the youngest artist in history to write and record a James Bond theme song. pic.twitter.com/Qd5cYIRlmg — James Bond (@007) January 14, 2020 Feels crazy to be a part of this in way, Eilish said in a statement about the project. To be able to score the theme song in a movie that is part of such a legendary series is a huge honor. James Bond is the coolest movie franchise ever. I'm still in shock. Finneas referred to the iconic location of previous James Bond themes in his own statement about the project. There is no more iconic pairing of music and cinema than the likes of Goldfinger and Live And Let Die. Said. We feel so lucky to play a small part in such a legendary franchise, hurrah 007. Eilish won five Grammy Awards at the ceremony held in January, including record of the year, album of the year, song of the year, and Best New Artist, linked to her debut album, When Everyone Sleeps, Where Are We Going?. He holds the distinction of being the youngest musician to receive nominations in the four main Grammy Awards categories in a single year. Directed by Cary Joji Fukunaga and featuring Daniel Craig as James Bond in the fifth installment of the long-running franchise, No Time to Die finds James Bond peacefully enjoying retirement until his friend and CIA officer Felix Leiter (Westworld actor Jeffrey Wright) pulls him out of retirement to help find a lost scientist. Oscar winner Rami Malek portrays the film's mysterious villain, Shaffin, while Captain Marvel actress Lassana Lynch plays a new character who takes on the 007 designation after Bond's departure. No Time To Die is scheduled to hit theaters November 20, but could have its premiere postponed due to the coronavirus pandemic. Author Recommendations Recommendations
